Anonymous: Your choice! Interview by Luke Vardy Anonymous, who have been steadily releasing new music for almost two decades, have had a mixed reputation as of late. With two recent albums, 'Secrets Of The Moon' and 'Execute,' being met with relatively positive critical responses, the five-piece have stepped back into the spotlight. They've also set up a UK and European tour as part of their 2018 world-wide tour, which they'll be doing with Voivod. Speaking to Luke Vardy we asked the band whether they were in anyway guilty of being negative or not mentioning it themselves, and if their new album, 'Execute' was good or bad. "There's a lot of critical negativity," explains vocalist/bassist Chris '505' Robinson. "We're very supportive of other bands, and I think that's usually reflected in the way we treat them." "All the bands that we like, we love them. That's the only difference," adds guitarist/vocalist Arin Gill, then clarifying that in using the word 'veteran,' he meant their fanbase, rather than age. "We're more open minded about shit these days, and we accept so many different things. The only thing we love more is metal. That's the main thing, and we're all we care about." "We're not negative at all," picks up guitarist/vocalist Joel Madden, "The whole thing is kinda nice, we're kinda like a rock band from California, or something." He wasn't about to elaborate much further on that, instead referring questions back to bandmate and co-founder Gordon 'Gordo' Fitzgerald, who was busy coming back from a knee injury. "We don't feel negative or anything," explained Gordo, who like Robinson, has the most experience of the band's vocalist/bassist 50b96ab0b6
